B

"Don't tell anyone". We hear these words when someone tells a secret to us. But it can be hard to keep a secret. We're often tempted to "spill the beans", even if we regret it later.

According to Asim Shah, a professor at Baylor College of Medicine, US, "keeping a secret may well "become a burden". This is because people often have an "obsessive(过度的) and anxious urge to share it with someone".

An earlier study, led by Anita E. Kelly, a scientist at the University of Notre Dame, US, suggested that keeping a secret could cause stress. People entrusted with secrets can suffer from depression, anxiety, and body aches, reported the Daily Mail.

But with secrets so often getting out, why do people share them at all? Shah explained that people often feel that it will help them keep a person as a friend. Another reason people share secrets is guilt over keeping it from someone close to them. A sense of distrust can develop when people who are close do not share it with each other. "Keeping or sharing secrets often puts people in a position of either gaining or losing the trust of someone," according to Shah.

He added that talkative people could let secrets slip out. But this doesn't mean that it is a good idea only to share secrets with quiet people. A quiet person may be someone who keeps everything inside. To tell such a person a secret may cause them stress, and make them talk about the secret.

Shah said that to judge whether to tell someone a secret, you'd better put yourself in their position. Think about how you would feel to be told that you mustn't give the information away. Shah also recommended that if you accidentally give up someone's secret you should come clean about it. Let the person know that their secret isn't so secret anymore.

61. The main idea of this passage is _____.
A. keeping secrets is a burden
B. it is hard to keep secrets
C. keeping or sharing secrets may influence your friendship
D. how to make your secrets safe
62. According to Anita, people who keep others' secrets may suffer from the following except _____.
A. stress B. sickness C. anxiety D. guilt
63. We can't know _____ based on the passage.
A. sharing a secret may help keep a person as a friend
B. people may feel guilty if they keep the secrets from their best friends
C. people may feel distrustful when their friends don't share their secrets
D. keeping secrets often puts people in a position of gaining the trust of someone
64. If people want to share their secrets, they should _____.
A. share with talkative people
B. share with quiet people
C. put themselves in others' shoes
D. share with their close friends
65. According to the passage, _____.
A. it can be hard to keep secrets because we will regret it later.
B. people should never share secrets with others.
C. if you let out your friends' secrets, you should be honest with your friends about it.

D. your friends may feel angry if you slip out their secrets.

I started out my career as an editor for a travel magazine. I didn't really mind the work, but I wanted something more challenging. My sister sent me some details for a content management position with a digital (数字的) reading startup (新创办的小公司). The job was a seemingly perfect mix of my skills and interests, so I jumped at it.

However, soon after I joined the company, its model changed to focus on education, and everything about my position changed. I was asked to take on the completely different roles of selling content to teachers and training people. I had no experience in sales, training or education. On top of that, I'm introverted. I felt more than a little outside my comfort zone (舒适区).

I knew I wanted to grow as an individual and make a serious impact (影响) on the company. I told myself that everything feels difficult at first and I should at least try. In a way, I felt like I didn't have a choice. I knew jumping out of the nest was the right thing for me, even though it felt pretty awful.

I was lucky to be surrounded by very helpful people, both at work and at home. My best friend reminded me that I'd taken huge leaps of faith in the past and told me I'd pull through just fine. It also helped that my boss seemed to have more faith in my abilities than I did. She never asked if I thought I could do it; she only asked if I was interested in trying.

I spent hours researching my company's products. I asked lots of questions and spoke to so many others that there were soon more good experiences than difficult ones. I looked for opportunities to put in extra effort. The more I did, the better I felt.

Over time, I discovered that the job was something I could do and liked doing. It was worth watching the company grow and knowing that I had something to do with its success. Sure, I made mistakes and took on more than I could handle. But I also learned that it's important to take risks and accept new opportunities, even when you're not sure you'll do well. I don't think there's anything worse than failing because you refuse to even try. I'm so glad I tried, and know I'll do it again.

66. The author changed her job mainly because she _____.

- A. got bored with the editing job
- B. found a job that seemed perfect for her
- C. was not satisfied with her salary
- D. was recommended to be a sales manager in a startup

67. After she joined the new company, _____.
 A. she quickly got used to the new position
 B. she suggested that the company focus on education
 C. her new duties pushed her to explore her full potential
 D. she wanted to quit because of the great pressure
68. The underlined word "introverted" means _____.
 A. outgoing B. shy C. tired D. stressful
69. The author finally manage to do her job because _____.
 A. her boss always had more faith in her capabilities
 B. her boss guided her in her work step by step
 C. her best friend encouraged her to take huge leaps of faith
 D. she spared no effort to improve her work with the help of others
70. The author wrote this article mainly to _____.
 A. show there isn't anything worse than failing
 B. give advice on how to step out of one's comfort zone
 C. share the lessons she had learned from her progress in her new job
 D. tell how she had achieved success in her challenging new job
