I used to have a friend called Matilda. We were together at secondary school. When we were 16, she moved because of her father's job, but we kept in touch. We used to write long letters to each other. I went to stay with her a couple of times too. We lost contact (联系) after university. I'd love to see her again because we used to be really good friends.

I used to hate a couple of teachers at school, but I think the one I hated the most was my French teacher. He was really terrible. I don't think he liked children or even teaching.

He used to be impatient with us and he didn't explain things well. I failed French — it was the only subject I ever failed at school.

I used to play a lot of squash (壁球), but I recently started playing tennis and now I like it better. The problem with squash is that it's pretty hard and maybe I'm just not strong enough to play it. Also the friend I used to play with always beat me. The great thing about tennis is that it's outdoors so I can enjoy the fresh air. It's less competitive and more fun. The only problem is that you can't play when it rains.

Many people often meet such a difficult situation. It's that they don't know the way in new places, and they are too shy to ask people for the way. 61.

Firstly, you must know some important and useful expressions, such as "Could you please...?" "Excuse me" and "Thanks a lot". Next, "Could you please...?" is often used while we ask for the direction. 63. It's also polite to shake hands with the strangers.

Secondly, we often need to take some useful things with us. They usually include pens, special maps, photos and so on. 64. We can write down the crucial (关键性的) words about the place, and then we can show them to the stranger who we want to ask for help. Of course, the map can help us find the correct way. 65. Then we can use the map to know the directions and find the right place.
