Born in America, I spoke English, not Chinese, the language of my ancestors (祖先). When I was three, my parents began to teach me Chinese with colorful picture cards, but I pushed them aside. My mom believed I would learn when I was ready. But the time never came.

On a Chinese New Year's Eve, my uncle spoke to me in Chinese, but I just stared at him, confused, shaking my head. "Still can't speak Chinese?" He said, "You can't even buy a fish in Chinatown (唐人街)."

"Hey, this is America, not China. I'll get some right now with or without Chinese." I replied and turned to my mom for permission.

"Remember to ask for fresh fish, Xin Xian Yu," she said, giving me a $20 bill. I repeated the words, running downstairs into the streets of Chinatown.

I found the fish store soon. It was very crowded. "I'd like to buy some fresh fish," I shouted to the man. But he paid no attention to my English words and turned to serve the next customer. People behind laughed at me. I felt angry, "Fresh fish. Xian Sheng Yu, please." "Very Xian Sheng," I repeated. The crowd laughed even louder. My face turned red and I ran back home empty-handed, except for the $20 bill in my pocket.

Should I laugh or cry? They're Chinese. I should feel right at home. Instead, I was the joke, a shame to the language.

It is the second-brightest object in our night sky after the moon. It is one of man's greatest scientific achievements. It's the International Space Station (ISS) that moves around Earth.

Nov 20th is the station's 20th birthday. In 1998, the first piece of the ISS was sent into space. Since then, 230 people from 18 countries have visited it. Five space agencies – those of the United States, Russia, Canada, Europe and Japan – worked together to build it. Weighing about 450 tons, it contains many different parts.

Generally, the ISS holds three to six people at one time. Astronauts living there work on a variety of different science projects. The ISS has hosted over 1,500 such projects, according to NASA (美国航空航天局). But the station's hardware is aging. In 2011, Russia announced that the ISS will be retired (退役) in 2020 in order to prevent it from becoming dangerous "space junk". However, the US later said it would use repairs to make its service life longer to 2025.

The ISS costs 21-28 billion yuan to operate each year. Many believed that this money could be better spent improving conditions on Earth. In February, US President Donald Trump announced plans to end support for the ISS by 2025. The US will use its money for other projects, like next-generation rockets and deep-space missions.

Although China is not part of the ISS program, it has helped with some of the station's experiments. China will soon have its own space station, becoming the third country after Russia and the US to do so. The station is set to be finished around 2020.

51. How many people have already visited the ISS since 1998?
A. 18. B. 230. C. 450. D. 1500.
52. According to the US, if it is repaired, how many more years will the ISS serve before it retires?
A. 5 years. B. 20 years. C. 22 years. D. 27 years.
53. What do we know about the ISS from this article?
A. The US built the ISS all by itself.
B. The ISS can be used for 20 years.
C. China is part of the ISS program and has its space station.
D. 21-28 billion yuan is spent operating the ISS every year.

54. Which of the following can be the best title for this passage?

A. Opinions on the ISS

B. Brightest Object in Space

C. Facts about the ISS

D. How much to Run the ISS

E

Parents are probably the closest people in the world to us. However, parent-child relationships are not always easy to deal with. What's worse, now that we live in an information age, the internet is bringing new challenges to family relations.

The China Youth & Children Research Center did a survey about such relationships in the United States, Japan, South Korea and China. According to the survey, the use of the internet has become one of the main reasons for fights between parents and children in China and South Korea. "This shows that some parents consider the internet being a toy instead of a tool," China Youth Daily said. "In addition, they don't have enough trust in their children, so it leads to conflicts sometimes."

However, the internet can actually improve parent-child relationships if both sides use it the right way.

Kim Se-Yeon, a 20-year-old South Korean who goes to college in Beijing, says that she believes the internet has brought her closer to her parents. She taught her parents how to use chat apps and post pictures on social media. Her parents trust her when they found that she can control herself well. These days, she and her parents often chat with each other and make video calls through the internet.

Experts suggest that to reduce your parents' concern about your internet usage, you should show them that you can manage your time well. Children are just as responsible for creating healthy family relationships as their parents are.

55. Which of the following countries DID NOT take part in the survey about parent-child relationship mentioned in the passage?

A. The United States.

B. South Korea.

C. The United Kingdom.

D. Japan.

56. What does the underlined word conflicts mean in the 2nd paragraph?

A. Decisions.

B. Fights.

C. Agreement.

D. Progress.

57. Why does the writer mention Kim Se-Yeon as an example?

A. Because she goes to college in Beijing.

B. Because her parents learn to use chat apps.

C. Because the internet didn't play an important role in her daily life.

D. Because the internet improves her relationship with her parents.

58. According to the passage which statement is NOT true?

A. Children should tell parents that they can manage their time well.

B. Children can do nothing to create healthy family relationships.

C. If parents have not enough trust in children, problems may appear.

D. Parent-child relationships are sometimes difficult to deal with.
