Mick Polly, the owner of a toy store, lives with his daughter Carolina in Kentucky, USA. People also call him the Bike Man because over the past few years, Mick has built hundreds of bikes for kids in need.

One day in 2012, a 13-year-old boy with a broken bike walked by Mick's house. "I was working in my garage (车库), and he asked if I could repair (修理) it," said Mick.

The boy's bike had broken wheels (车轮). Mick posted a picture on Facebook, asking his friends if they had the parts he needed. One friend saw the picture and gave away (捐赠) two used bikes. Mick took parts from each to repair the wheels for the boy.

Soon after, Mick repaired a bike for the boy's brother and one for his sister. During the year, he repaired lots of bikes for kids whose parents didn't have enough money for new ones.

"People are throwing away bikes every day," said Mick.

Mick puts the bikes and bike parts in his garage. "I take off the good wheels or the seats and use them," he said.

Up to now, Mick has repaired hundreds of bikes and given away about 700 newly repaired bikes. They're free, but the kids must agree to try their best to study in school.

Mick also hopes the bikes will get kids off the sofa. "When I was growing up, we all rode our bikes," he said. "I hope these kids can get some exercise."
