One day, I saw a boy shop alone at the shop I worked. He chose some school things he wanted and went to the checkout (付款台).

The young shop assistant (店员) told him he needed to pay $37.60. The boy became very sad and said he only had $20. He took out one thing at a time, and at last he got down to his $20. With eyes full of tears, he asked if he could call his mom to pick him up. When he got through, it seemed that his mom was too busy to pick him up in a minute.

He tried to stop the tears and walked outside to wait on the chair in front of the shop. This was too much for the young assistant. She kept looking outside to see if the boy was all right. Then she said, “I wish I could pay for the rest (剩余部分) of his things.” One of the other girls said she had a few dollars. Then two others said they could help, too.

These four young girls pooled their money and found they had more than enough to pay for the boy’s things. Then they chose more school things, and gave them all to the boy. The boy laughed happily. His mom arrived much later, but he didn’t just run to the car; he ran back into the shop and called out, “Thank you!”

I’m Tom. I live in London with my family. I go to a high school here.

I like reading very much, and I have a lot of books at home. I’m in the school book club now. There are fifty students and three teachers in the club. We meet from 7:00 to 8:00 every Thursday evening. We usually talk about one book together. Our teacher sometimes asks us some questions about a book. All of us want to answer them, because it’s interesting like a game. We can borrow a book from the club, but we must return it quickly.

It’s fun to join the book club, because we can also make new friends here. There is a new book show every month in the club. I like the show very much and I never miss it!
