Many of you have probably had this experience: You get on a train and are ready to have a rest or read a book, only to find that the passenger in front of you is watching a TV show on his tablet without headphones. The child next to you won't stop crying. And the old lady behind you talks on her phone during the whole trip.

Wish the train could be less noisy? ▲ The Beijing-Shanghai high-speed railway, one of China's busiest high-speed rail lines, will have "quiet" carriages (车厢) starting from Dec 23, Xinhua reported.

In quiet carriages, on-board videos will be muted (静音) and announcements will be made at a lower volume. Doors at the ends of the carriage will be kept closed to reduce noise from other carriages, CGTN noted. Train attendants (乘务员) will be responsible for making sure that passengers keep quiet and follow the rules.

Passengers who are willing to follow the rules can choose the quiet carriages when booking their tickets, according to the China's national railway operators.

Some people have pointed out that this kind of quiet environment should be offered in all carriages. They say that having quiet carriages might give people the idea that they don't need to be quiet in non-quiet carriages.

While some internet users are in favor of the new service, it has also hot discussion about just how quiet travelers should be in quiet carriages. Many people have raised questions such as "What if I snore (呼噜)?" and "Can we talk to our travel partners if we need to?"

B. Passengers need to pay more for the quiet carriage.

C. Snoring and talking to partners are not allowed in the quiet carriage.

D. Passengers should mind their behaviors no matter which carriages they take.

C

There is this girl at school, and we don't really get along. She keeps spreading rumors (谣言) about me and my classmates stay away from me. What should I do?

— Sam

Some people spread rumors as a way to scare others and get popularity. But spreading rumors usually makes people feel really upset. So what can you do if you find yourself the target (对象) of rumors and social bullying?

Turn to a trusted adult for support. Talk to someone you can trust, like a parent, teacher, or coach. Let that person know what you're going through. Keep him or her know what's going on, even as things start to get better. A trusted adult is a good listener who can help you feel more supported and less alone.

Find your friends. Find a friend or two who are willing to help you and who won't listen to rumors. If you want, share how you feel with those friends. Don't dwell on the situation. If you always put it in your mind, you may have a harder time. Do something to spare your attention and even forget it. Spend time and energy having fun with your friends and doing activities you enjoy.

Speak up. Try to speak to the girl who's spreading rumors. Don't be angry or mean. No shouting. Just say what you want calmly and clearly. After you've said what you want, you can simply walk away.

Going through a situation like this can be difficult and painful. Be positive, get support from people and try to say no to rumor makers. These things can help you go through a difficult situation and come out stronger.

- () 38. Why did Sam write the letter?
- A. To ask for some advice.
 - B. To share his school life with us.
 - C. To tell people not to spread rumors.
 - D. To explain why people spread rumors.
- () 39. A trusted adult is someone who ▲.

Usama Kalim, a 27-year-old university student from Pakistan (巴基斯坦), always wanted to live in a big city until he experienced country life in China. While in China, Kalim joined the Looking China Youth Film Project and made a short documentary about a young Chinese man named Lang Xiaoyong who gave up his job in the big city and chose to start a business near his hometown in the countryside. The project is to show Chinese culture to the world through the lens (镜头) of young foreign filmmakers.

Lang was born in Shiping village, Chongqing Southwest China. In 2015, he went back to his hometown to follow his dream. Kalim learned from Lang that tourism provided villagers with more job chances. "I am so moved by his story. He came from a poor family, but he didn't let that hold him back," says Kalim. "Lang was always one of the top students in the class and got a well-paid job in the city. He could have continued his city life, but he chose to come back and do something for his hometown," he adds.

Over the past ten years, a total of 610 young foreigners have visited China through the program, producing 609 short documentaries. Joseph Dwyer, an American director, has joined the program twice to record the development of transportation in China.

Six years ago, curious about how people moved around in big cities, Dwyer visited North China and made a documentary called Through Tianjin. Last year, he was invited to China again and made a short video on Jingzhang Railway that connects the cities of Beijing and Zhangjiakou.

"Right now the world is very tense (紧张), and relationships between countries are not at their best, but I think through the exchange of ideas and culture through programs like Looking China, we can work together to get a better understanding between different cultures and create a more positive world," says Dwyer.

() 42. Looking China Youth Film Project is a program ____▲____.

- A. set up to raise money
- B. directed by Usama Kalim
- C. getting popular in Pakistan
- D. showing Chinese culture to foreigners
