Matthew Cuthbert lived with his sister Marilla on their farm on Prince Edward Island in Canada. Everybody in the little village knew that the Cuthberts were quiet people who worked very hard on their farm.

One afternoon Matthew drove the horse and cart to the station. "Has the five-thirty train arrived yet?" he asked the station-master.

"Yes," the man replied. "And there's a passenger who's waiting for you. A little girl."

"A little girl?" asked Matthew. "But I've come for a boy! The children's home is sending us one of their orphan boys. We're going to adopt(收养)him, you see, and he's going to help me with the farm work."

"Well, perhaps the children's home didn't have any boys, so they sent you a girl," answered the station-master carelessly. "Here she is."

Matthew turned shyly to speak to the child. She was about eleven, with long red hair in two plaits. Her face was small, white and thin, with a lot of freckles, and she had large grey green eyes. She was wearing an old brown hat and a dress which was too small for her.

"Are you Mr Cuthbert of Green Gables?" she asked excitedly in a high, sweet voice. "I'm very happy to come and live with you, and belong to you. My real name is Anne Shirley, but I like to imagine my name is Cordelia, it's a very beautiful name."

Matthew felt sorry for the child. He decided to take her home. He was surprised that enjoyed the journey home. He didn't like talking himself. But today, he only had to listen, because the little girl talked and talked and talked while they drove along.

They were now driving past some very old apple trees next to the road. The trees were full of sweet-smelling, snowy-white flowers. The little girl looked at them.

"Aren't the trees beautiful?" she said happily. "But am I talking too much? Please tell me. I can stop if necessary, you know."

Matthew smiled at her. "You go on talking," he answered. "I like listening to you."

The next thing happened at one o'clock in the morning when John Straker got out of bed. "What's the matter?" said his wife. "Where are you going?"

"To the stables(马厩)," Straker said. "I can't stop thinking about that stranger. I just want to have a look around."

"But it's raining. Wait until the rain stops," she said.

"No, no," Straker said. "I want to go now."

He left the house and Mrs Straker went back to sleep. At seven in the morning she woke up, but her husband was not there. She quickly got up, called the servant, Edith, and they ran down to the stables.

They found the stables unlocked. Straker was not there, and inside, on a chair, Ned Hunter slept like a dead man. Silver Blaze(银光,马名) was gone, and his stable door was open. They called the other two boys from the room over the stables. They were good sleepers and heard nothing in the night.

Nobody could wake Ned Hunter, so the two women and the boys ran out to look for the trainer and the horse. Five hundred metres from the stables, they saw Straker's coat on a small tree. Down the hill, just past the tree, they found the trainer. He was dead.

There was a long cut in his leg, and his head was broken in three places. In his right hand he had a small knife, with blood all over it, and in his left hand he had a red and black scarf.

Edith Baxter knew the scarf at once, and later, so did Ned Hunter.

"It's the stranger's scarf," he told us. "When I went to get the dog, that stranger was still at the stable window. He put something in my meat curry(咖喱烧肉), to make me sleep—I know he did. Edith saw him, with his arm through the window."

Ned Hunter was right about his meat curry. There was some of his dinner left, and we found a lot of opium(麻醉剂) in it. That's why Ned slept like a dead man.

What about the horse? Everybody on Dartmoor is looking for Silver Blaze, but there is no news of him.

What should you do when you come to a word and you think you don't know what it means? Following some easy steps can help you.

36

First, sound it out. Then say it to yourself. It might sound like a word you know. Sometimes you know a word in your head but you don't know what it looks like in print. So if you match up what you know and what you read—you have the word!

37

Look at the context—the other words and sentences around it. Read this sentence: When it rained, the dog looked for shelter (避难所) in the doorway. If the word shelter doesn't look similar, look at the words around it. Rain and in the doorway might give you helpful information.

38

Look at the parts of the word. Does it have any parts you know? These can help you understand what it means. If you don't know the meaning of miner (矿工), try looking at parts of the word. A lot of times, -er at the end of a word means "a person who does something". So a miner might be someone who works in a mine.

39

If the three steps above don't work, you can look it up. You can find the word in a dictionary—either a book or online.

40

For some new words, be brave to guess the meaning. You can connect the words with your own experience or common sense of life to guess them. Even you can use your imagination.

根据材料内容,从下面五个选项中选出能填入文中空缺处的最佳选项,使文章意思通顺、内容完整。

- A. Say it.
- B. Guess it.
- C. Look it up.
- D. Use context.
- E. Use word parts.
