Ariella Pacheco poses with some of her special dolls. (BBC)

One day in January this year, Ariella Pacheco of California read a story about doll designer Amy Jandrisevits. Her "A Doll Like Me" project makes look-alike dolls for children with disabilities (残疾). Pacheco wanted to make similar dolls.

Over the past several months, Pacheco has designed and sewn (缝制) cloth dolls for four local kids who have birthmarks, surgical scars (手术疤痕), or other unique physical features (特征). Pacheco asked the kids about their favorite sports and hobbies. She also watched doll-making videos and attended sewing camp. It was important to her that the children recognize themselves in the dolls. However, their differences were not the most noticeable feature.

"I really value the beauty in little things," Pacheco said. "Each of these kids is so unique (独一无二的), so special. I hope through these dolls they can see themselves in a new light and really appreciate their beauty."

Two good friends, Sam and Jason, met with a car accident on their way home one snowy night. The next morning, Sam woke up blind. His legs were broken. The doctor, Mr. Lee, was standing by his bed, looking at him worriedly. When he saw Sam awake, he asked, "How are you feeling, Sam?" Sam smiled and said, "Not bad, Doctor. Thank you very much for doing the special operation (手术)." Mr. Lee was moved by Sam. When he was leaving, Sam said, "Please don't tell Jason about it." "Well... Well... OK," Mr. Lee replied.

Months later when Jason's wounds healed, Sam was still very sick. He couldn't see or walk. He could do nothing but stay in his wheelchair all day long. At first, Jason stayed with him for a few days. But days later, Jason thought it boring to spend time with a disabled man like Sam. So he went to see Sam less and less. He made new friends. From then on, he didn't go to visit Sam any more. Sam didn't have any family or friends except Jason. He felt very sad.

Things went from bad to worse. Sam died a year later. When Jason came, Mr. Lee gave him a letter from Sam. In the letter Sam said, "Dear Jason, I am disabled. But I want you to be a healthy man. So I gave my eyes to you so that you can enjoy life as a healthy man. Now you have new friends. I'm glad to see that you are as healthy and happy as usual. I'm glad you live a happy life. You are always my best friend... Sam". When he finished reading the letter, Mr. Lee said, "I have promised that I will keep this a secret until Sam is gone. Now you know it."

I used to watch her from my kitchen window. She seemed so small as she muscled her way through the crowd of boys on the playground. The school was across the street from our home and I would often watch the kids as they played during break. I remember the first day I saw her playing basketball. I watched in wonder as she ran circles around the other kids. She managed to shoot jump shots just over their heads and into the net. The boys always tried to stop her but no one could.

One day I asked her why she practiced so much. Without a moment of hesitation she said, "I want to go to college. The only way I can go is to get a scholarship. I am going to play college basketball. I want to be the best. My Daddy told me if the dream is big enough, the facts don't count." I watched her through those junior high years and into high school. Every week, she led her school team to victory one after another.

One day in her senior year, I saw her sitting in the grass, head in her arms. I walked across the street and sat down in the cool grass beside her. Quietly I asked what was wrong. "Oh, nothing," came a soft reply, "I am just too short." The coach told her that at 5'5" she would probably never get to play for a top ranked team—much less offered a scholarship—so she should stop dreaming about college.

She was heartbroken as I sensed her disappointment. I asked her if she had talked to her dad about it yet. She told me that her father said those coaches were wrong. They just did not understand the power of a dream. He told her that if she truly wanted a scholarship and that nothing could stop her except one thing — her own attitude. He told her again, “If the dream is big enough, the facts don’t count.” The next year, as she and her team went to the Northern California Championship game, she was offered a scholarship. Finally, She was going to get the college education that she had dreamed of.

66. The girl practice playing basketball so much because _____

- A. she wanted to play basketball better than boys.
- B. she had the gift for playing basketball.
- C. playing basketball can increase her height.
- D. she wanted to get the college education.

67. The girl was heartbroken because _____.

- A. she was considered too short to be a top player
- B. her coach’s word stopped her from playing basketball
- C. her father did wrong to her
- D. she wouldn’t be offered a scholarship any more

68. The sentence “if the dream is big enough, the facts don’t count.” means _____.

- A. every one of us should have a dream
- B. if you have a dream, it must come true
- C. the dream is more important than the facts
- D. if you try your best, a dream will beat the facts

69. We can learn from the passage that _____.

- A. the girl stopped dreaming about college because of the coach
- B. the father always encourages the girl
- C. a top basketball team can offer the player a scholarship
- D. the girl was much higher than 5’5” the next year

70. The writer mainly wants to tell us that _____

- A. practice makes perfect
- B. Rome was not built in one day
- C. where there is a will, there is a way
- D. pride comes before a fall
