I like playing the piano very much. Carl Smith became my new piano teacher when I was fourteen years old. In one of my lessons, he asked me how long I practiced the piano every day. I said three or four hours a day.

"Well, please don't do that again!" he said to me loudly. "When you grow up, you are going to be much busier. Practice in minutes! Five or ten minutes before school, after lunch or between chores. Practice the piano through the day, and it will become a part of your life." I did as he told me. And I played the piano very well later.

Years later, when I was teaching at Columbia, I wanted to write. But for two years, I wrote nothing down on paper. My excuse(借口) was that I had no time.
