	FUTURE CITY
Linda	My future city is on the sea. The city is not very big. And only ten thousand people live in it. There are no buses or cars on the city roads. People "fly" in their cars. All the cars use sunlight as energy. So there is no air pollution. The buildings in the city are very tall. They have 200-300 floors, and they are so close to cloud.
Jacky	My future city is on the Moon. As you know, there is no air or water on the Moon. So people in the city all live in large domes . The dome is a very large house with a round, closed roof (屋顶)and it has lots of open space inside. It's big enough for twenty thousand people. If you're in it, you will feel that you're on Earth. A dome is like a small city. It has everything that people need inside.
Jenny	My future city is something like a big plane. This plane carries about 5,000 people. And it can fly everywhere. When summer comes, it flies to cool places. And when winter comes, it flies to warm places. So people in the city can experience(体验)spring all year round. And in 3008, if Beijing holds the Olympic Games again, it will fly to Beijing!

We all cry for water when we are thirsty. But do you know, in very hot, dry weather, plants also make very low sounds --- as if they are crying out for help? You see, in a plant's stem (茎) there are several hundred "water pipes(管道)" that bring water from soil all the way up to the leaves. When the ground turns dry, it becomes harder and harder for plants to do this.

In very hot days, plants have to get any water that they can.

Scientist Robert Winter has found out that when plants can get no water, their "water pipes" snap (发出断裂声). When that happens, the whole plant vibrates (振动) a little. The snapping pipes make noises ten thousand times more quiet than a whisper (低语).

Robert knows that healthy, well-watered plants are quiet. He also knows that many insects (昆虫) prefer attacking dry plants rather than healthy plants. How do the insects know which are healthy plants and which are not? Robert thinks that the insects may hear the plants crying and then they may come to kill.

- () 50. There are many "water pipes" _____.
 A. in a plant's stem
 B. in a plant's peel (果皮)
 C. in a plant's bark (树皮)
