Gerlinde Kaltenbrunner is a great mountain climber. She has climbed 14 of the world's highest mountains, which are all over 8,000m high. Because the air is thinner, most climbers need extra oxygen(额外的氧气) to reach the top of these mountains. However, Kaltenbrunner is the first woman to climb all 14 mountains without extra oxygen.

Kaltenbrunner started climbing when she was growing up in the mountains of Austria.

At 13 years old, she climbed her first big mountain, Sturzhahn. She became a nurse, but always had a passion for climbing. At 32 years old, Kaltenbrunner climbed her fourth big mountain, Nanga Parbat in Pakistan, and later decided to become a full-time(全职的) mountain climber.

In 2007, Kaltenbrunner had an accident when climbing Dhaulagiri in Nepal. She was inside her tent one morning when an avalanche struck(雪崩发生). When the avalanche stopped, it was very dark and she didn't know where she was. She found a small knife, and cut a hole in her tent. Slowly, Kaltenbrunner got out of the snow.

After the accident, Kaltenbrunner said, "I couldn't stop climbing. This is my life." She climbed the 14th mountain, K2 between Pakistan and China, in 2011. Although she faced many problems when she climbed mountains, Kaltenbrunner never thought of giving up. "If you really love something, you'll find a way to do it," she said.
