You probably know that some dogs aren't just pets. They hold different kinds of jobs and have worked with people for thousands of years.

What makes dogs such great workers? They learn fast, and they can also hear and smell better than we can. This means dogs can do jobs that people can't. Some of their jobs may surprise you.

Many dogs work with people to help them feel better. These dogs are called therapy dogs. Therapy dogs make people feel comfortable and keep them calm. These dogs sometimes visit sick people in hospitals to cheer them up. Therapy dogs need to have a friendly personality. They are trained to act calmly to new places, smells and people.

Some dogs help people with disabilities. These dogs are called service dogs. Service dogs can do many different jobs. For example, some of them help people who cannot see well. These dogs are trained to keep people from stepping into traffic. They are also trained to lead their owners around objects. That way, their owners won't fall.

Some dogs work to find people who are lost, hurt, or trapped or find things that are hidden. These dogs are called search-and-rescue (营救) (SAR) dogs. Many SAR dogs use their powerful nose to find people who need help.

Dogs help us do many types of jobs. As our work changes and grows, so do the jobs we give to dogs. Their intellectual abilities, friendliness and powerful senses make dogs wonderful.

Bimla knew that she wanted to go to university when she got her results. But she was worried that she would not be accepted by the other students once she got there.

Although she was always told at her school that she would get good grades (成绩) at university, she believed that other students would be better than her in many ways. "I know I got good grades at 'school, but I thought they wouldn't be enough," she said. Some of her friends thought she shouldn't even think about going to university because of her poor family, but she didn't agree with that and said, "I think university should be for everyone, no matter (无论) where they come from. "

Growing up in a large family, she always understood that it wasn't easy for her parents to feed the family. "When I told my parents I wanted to go to university, they weren't very happy at first," she remembered. "But they accepted the idea when they were told about the advantages of having a university graduate in the family. "

Money was short at home, so Bimla worked after school and saved nearly on everything. She wanted to work in medicine after graduation to make more money.

She also looked around and found a university near her village, which meant she could stay at home and study at the same time. It wasn't easy travelling to and from university each day, but she found that she could use the time sitting on the train in a better way. She had a good hour in which she could do some real studying. With her studying, travelling and going to work, she found that she had little time to chat with others. However, when she saw her parents working all hours, she knew she got support and couldn't complain too much.

She didn't think she could enter the well-known university, so she was excited when she was offered a place. "I never thought it possible," she said.

Three years later, she remembered her fears of not being accepted. "I've made some really great friends and everybody has been so helpful, even the teachers! The idea that you are not good enough because you are different is so wrong—university is not like that. "

She wanted to say to other families, "If your child is good enough and really wants to go on to university, it's better to imagine the advantages there for you and your family"

36. Before Bimla went to university, _____.

- A. her grades weren't so good as other students'
- B. her parents depended on her to feed the family

② She found it difficult to study on the train.
③ She got on with her university classmates.
④ She was too busy to make money at university.

A. ①③ B. ①④ C. ②③ D. ②④

38. We can know that Bimla's parents supported her by _____.

- A. chatting with her B. working in medicine
C. working all hours D. saving on everything

39. The underlined sentence in the passage shows us _____.

- A. the influence of friends B. the abilities of children
C. the importance of education D. the problems of the poor

40. What is the best title for the passage?

- A. Hope for Girls B. University for Everyone
C. Using Time in Better Way D. Growing Pains in Big Family

Falling on March 20 this year, Spring Equinox, also called Chunfen in Chinese, is the fourth of the Twenty-four Solar Terms. It marks the same length（长度） of the day and night.

Have you ever wondered about the origin（起源） of this special solar term? It is said that a long time ago, as there was not enough sunlight, it was almost impossible for people to grow crops. One day, Emperor Yandi decided to fly to Penglai Island on a five-colored bird to search for the sun so that his people could enjoy a better harvest. After a dangerous journey, he brought the sun back and hung it in the sky. From then on, there were plenty of crops on Earth and people lived happily and peacefully. This day is called Chunfen.

Today, people in different places have different traditions to celebrate Chunfen. Chunfen is the best time to fly kites. The wind for kite flying can't be too strong or too gentle. The gentle wind on the day of Chunfen perfectly satisfies those needs, so it is easier for kites to go up. It is usually a wonderful time for people, both old and young, to go to the open spaces to fly kites. It is believed that flying kites on Chunfen can drive away bad luck and bring back good luck.

Chunfen also means hope and growing up, just like the plants. Since ancient times, people ate food based on the changes of seasons. In southern China's Fujian and Guangdong provinces, people living in villages dig wild vegetables and cook them in soup to clean their stomachs. The meals are also thought as a way to wish for a healthy and strong body. During Chunfen, wheat grows and flowers come out. Leek（韭菜）is delicious and fresh. It's the best time to cook food with it, although cooking styles are quite different between northern and southern China.

When Chunfen comes, remember to have fresh vegetables on your table. Also, don't say no if you are invited to take part in different activities to enjoy the good weather.
