RENT. LOVE. REPEAT.

Rent (租赁) clothing through The Mr & Ms Collection, a personal service for both men and women.

With our service, you will never grow bored with your clothing again. The low monthly cost will make you love even more. You can also buy with your member price!

WHY THEY LOVE US AND YOU WILL TOO

Every time I get a box to my door, I am really psyched, wondering what to try out next! It helps me to enjoy the pleasure of being a woman. The Mr & Ms Collection makes me stand tall and be seen. Dressing beautifully also helps me feel great about myself.

Vina H.

I am a television news reporter who is on camera five days a week. The customer service at The Mr & Ms Collection is the best I've ever experienced. The perfect example of this is when I was bitten (咬) by a dog in March and couldn't work for a few days. I received a "Get Well" message from the manager who also asked if I would like some comfortable clothes while I recovered (痊愈). No other rental service cares about their customers like The Mr & Ms Collection!

Leslie D.

I totally enjoy The Mr & Ms Collection! I used to buy things that I like, wear them once, and then leave them alone. This service has not only helped me from being bored with taking hours to pick something out, but has also helped me to try out styles (样式) I wouldn't usually pick out for myself.

Tomb Sweeping Day is a one-day Chinese holiday that has been celebrated in China for centuries. Every year in early April, tens of thousands of people in China visit the tombs of their ancestors to show their respect.

On the day, Chinese families will sweep the tombs and clean away the grass around them. Then they burn paper money and put flowers and fruit in front of the tombs. They hope the dead can enjoy them and bring the family good luck.

However, it is not only the Chinese who remember the dead. People in other countries also have festivals for the dead.

In Japan, O-Bon Festival is one of the most important festivals. It is held from August 13 to 16. It is also a holiday that serves as a family reunion (团圆). During O-bon, Japanese people return to their hometown and visit their ancestors' tombs. They also believe their ancestors' spirits return home to be reunited with their family. People perform a “bon odori” dance to welcome the spirits. On the last day of O-bon, they put paper lanterns in a river to send off the spirits.

In Russia, people remember their ancestors on the Day of Rejoicing (欣慰). It's usually in late April or early May. The name of this festival means birth and happiness. Russians believe that people shouldn't feel sad for the dead because death means birth in another world. On the Day of Rejoicing, Russian people draw beautiful pictures on eggs and put them in front of tombs. After that they have a picnic together. They hope for a good life for both the living and the dead.

Jiang Mengnan, 30 years old, comes from Yizhang, Chenzhou, Hunan Province. She couldn't communicate like common people. However, through hard working, she was excellent at school and university. In 2018, she achieved her dream of studying for a PhD at Tsinghua University. And this year, she will graduate. Her story touched many people, and she was honored as an inspirational role model in last year's Touching China awards.

Born into an ethnic Yao (瑶族) family in Yizhang county, Jiang's world has been silent since she was 6 months old. The medicine she was given irreparably (不可挽回地) hurt her hearing. Jiang's parents began showing her how to understand people by reading lips when she just learned to walk. It was a slow process. But her parents did not give up, and soon Jiang began to speak.

When she was old enough, Jiang studied at a standard primary school, not a special school as was common for most disabled children. She said it was difficult at first. During lessons, teachers would often write on the blackboard with their backs to the students, it wouldn't influence other students. But, Jiang always missed much of the content (内容) for this reason. She had to copy down everything on the blackboard in the lesson. After class, she must study alone to keep up with her classmates. After years' hard working, she was admitted (承认) to Jilin University in 2011.

She knew the support from others was important on her own journey, so she visited many special school during her vacations. "I've received so much help from others over the years. The best way to repay them is for me to do something good for society. If I can do something to make others less hard, it will be a very meaningful thing," she said. With the support of technology, service robots with many kinds of uses have played important roles in Shanghai's fight against the latest COVID-19 outbreak.

Inside a hospital in Shanghai New International Expo Centre, the first 28 "disinfection (消毒) robots" have been put into use. Each of them can work 24 hours a day is prepared with three disinfection tools.

In the meantime, a group of "5G indoor cloud robots" can deliver (运送) over 20 boxed meals at a time, and go to named places for patients to get their food themselves. With the help of these robots, the efficiency (效率) of meals delivery has been greatly improved.

The service robots have helped to lower the risk of cross-infection (交叉感染) between patients and they can also work without troubling the medical staff.

According to the local government, more than 200 robots will soon join the service at a hospital in the city's Lingang area. More 5G-based intelligent robots are also being prepared to work at hospitals. The data (数据) collected by 5G robots can be processed and sent in time, which can help people to know about the latest news of the COVID-19 outbreak.

More and more intelligent robots and self-driving cars have been used to fight the COVID-19 outbreak. Under the leadership of the party and the state, we believe that the people of Shanghai will be able to overcome the epidemic (传染病) at an early date and return to normal life as soon as possible.
