It is well known that doing exercise can help people lose weight and have a healthy life. Now, a new study has found another good reason for doing exercise — it can help improve students' grades.

The study was carried out by Dr. William and his team. According to the new study, students in good physical condition are more likely(可能的) to get good grades in tests.

About 2,000 students took part in the study. The students came from all different grades. They were asked to take part in a one-mile running test. It was found that if a student needed more time to finish the running, he or she would probably lose more points in the later study test.

"If people want their brains to be in good condition, they should have healthy bodies," said Dr. William. "Parents should take the result of this study more seriously. If they want their children to do better in tests, they should plan enough time for both study and doing exercise."

But the team haven't found out the reason why this happens. Further studies are needed to work out why exercising plays such an important part in study grades.

Xu Yuanchong was a Chinese translator. He is best known for his translations of ancient Chinese poems into English and French.

Xu's translation career(生涯) began during his college years when he studied at the National Southwest Associated University in Kunming. In 1939, he translated a poem written by Chinese poet Lin Huiyin titled Don't Cast Away, which is known as his earliest work. In the late 1940s, Xu went to France to study French literature(文学). Later he returned to China and began to work at Peking University.

While teaching at Peking University, Xu kept on his translation work. He was the first Chinese to translate Chinese poetry into English and French. For him, translated literature is a beautiful art. He once said, "The greatest joy on the earth is to introduce the beauty created by a people to the whole world."

Xu paid much attention to the beauty of language. He would leave something out and add something to make the translated works more beautiful. But other translators thought that made his translation a bit different from the meaning of the source text(原作). Xu had many debates(辩论) with them. He said, "I'm not afraid, because the truth becomes clearer with each debate."

Over the years, Xu's beautiful translation works have acted as a cultural bridge connecting the East with the West. English- and French-speaking readers are able to better understand Chinese literature through Xu's translations. At the same time, Chinese readers can enjoy foreign works in the same way as they read works written in Chinese.

As a traditional art form of the Dai people, Dai embroidery(傣绣) has been passed down for generations(代). Nowadays, there are more than 500 Dai embroidery artists in Yuxi, a central city in Yunnan that is home to the Dai people.

Seeing a group of wild Asian elephants wandering(游荡) from a place to another in Yunnan, the artists came up with the idea of creating embroidery pieces about the elephant family that arrived in Yuxi in April and wandered around the area for quite a long time.

Since leaving their forest home in Xishuangbanna in March, 2020, the elephants have traveled over 500 kilometers. They walked northwards through forests, villages and even highways, without any clear sign of where they would go. Their unusual journey has won them fans from all over the world, including the Dai embroidery artists.

One of the artists' embroidery pieces, called Where are the elephants?, shows the elephants' journey across Yuxi. The ancient skills of the Dai people are shown in this work. For example, several thumb-sized shoes connect three locations on the elephants' trip. Besides, the artists used Dai Jin to make the three elephants on the embroidery piece. The beautiful cloth(布料), known for its special patterns and bright colors, is one of China's intangible cultural heritage items(非物质文化遗产项目).
