When she was eighty years old, my grandmother was still quite strong. Every two days, she walked for more than an hour to reach the supermarket. She carried a heavy bag of food. Then she spent another hour walking home.

My grandmother was quite old, but she still looked very pretty. Her hands, her feet and her face showed that she had been a beautiful young woman. Time didn't change her young heart.

My grandmother's greatest interest was theater. This interest never diminished(减弱) with her age. She never missed a show when there were actors in town. If no actors came for several months, she would organize her own show. She was the manager, producer(制片人), and young character, all at the same time.

My grandmother's own plays were always dramas. They were inspired by books she had read and by what she had seen on the stage. She always chose her favorite grandson to play the role of the hero. In the end, he would always marry the young character that grandmother played and they lived happily.

What do you think of a "talking kitchen"? A French Digital(数字) Kitchen has been developed at Newcastle University in the UK. It teaches students how to cook French food and speak French at the same time. For the first time, students can learn the language by the following cooking steps.

All grammar and A have been carefully chosen to make sure that the users can understand French well. After learning for some time, the users can test themselves by doing a short test on the computer.

The kitchen project was started by Professor Paul Seedhouse. He became interested in the idea after he visited another kind of kitchen. He said, "The purpose of the French Digital Kitchen is to make learning a language more interesting and educational."

How does the kitchen work? There is a computer in the kitchen. With this computer, the users can first choose a French recipe(食谱) that they want to follow. Using information in the computer, the kitchen starts to teach the users to make a French dish. If you follow the instructions on the computer, it will move on to the next. If you go wrong, the program will go back and repeat the recipe or information. At any time, the users can ask the kitchen to repeat the recipe or any information.

The new kitchen can be used in schools, universities and even people's homes. The researchers can also develop the European Digital Kitchen, for the next three years.
