Once, there was a young man who looked down on the old. He always thought the old lived a useless life. He also did this to his father. He often ignored (忽视) his father's efforts to him and the family.

One day, the father and the son happened to meet each other in the field. The son suggested that they should take a walk together. As they walked, a beautiful garden came into their sight. The son pointed to one of the prettiest flowers and said, "We young people are like this flower, so healthy, so fragrant (芬芳), and full of spirit." He continued, "What about you? Just like the falling leaves from a dying tree."

Hearing this, the father smiled, but said nothing. They continued walking in silence. When they passed a store, the father stopped and went in. He bought a walnut (核桃) and showed it to his son. The father said, "We old are like this walnut. We've experienced many hard events in life. So we built up such a hard shell, and at the same time we also built up a nice fruit, so full-grown."

"But every fruit was born by flower," said the son.

"Yes, but not every flower can produce fruit..."

Indeed in our family, our parents are not falling leaves, but the experienced walnuts. They protect us all the time and all the way, just like old hard walnuts. They are the ones we should thank forever. And we should try to be a flower that can produce good fruit.
