Recently, Daniel has a chance to stay in Paris for a week. On his first day there, he decided to take a walk around the city. Half an hour later, Daniel couldn't find the way back. He was lost. Since he couldn't speak French, he had to use English. He stopped a teenager and asked him the way in English. To his surprise, the teenager shook his head and walked away. Then a young lady did the same thing. It seemed that everyone refused to help him. At last, an old man told him the way. He also explained the reason why Daniel couldn't get help. He said that most French people didn't like answering tourists' questions in English. Maybe Daniel should begin to learn French.
