Passage 2

On May 31, 2021, China introduced a new policy (政策) that allows every family to have up to three children. This was to fight China's aging problem, as much of the population is growing older. What do teenagers think of the policy? Here're some of their opinions.

Zhao Zhihan, Beijing, 16 years old

It might be hard to have three children for a family. Parents would have to work really hard to support (养活) the family. If I lived in a family like this as a child, I would feel stressed out.

Liu feifei, Taiyuan, 13 years old

I worry that my parents will pay less attention to (更少关注) me if they have another child. I think they will spend more time on the younger kid and I have to do everything by myself. What if (如果...怎么办) no one makes meals or takes me from and to school?

Li Jinyan, Lanzhou, 14 years old

Although I already have a younger brother, I want to have a sister as well. I'm a girl, so I think a sister would understand me better.

Wang Yizhan, Taizhou, 15 years old

To be honest, I don't care if my parents have another child. It is OK to have a younger brother or sister. I don't mind playing with them as long as my parents feel happy.

Passage 6

阅读下面短文，完成表格。

Do you want to be a good reader? If so, read the following suggestions (建议).

Choose the right books

If you want to read, you should choose the books carefully. What is the "right" book for you? First, it should be of course a good book which was written well by a good writer. So you can learn a lot from it. Second, it can interest you. This is very important. Only when you're interested can you keep reading it. The famous books may not be the right books if they're not interesting for you.

Make a reading plan

Before you read each book, it's better to make a plan. Be sure about when to finish the book and how much reading you need to do in a week or even a day. If you don't make a reading plan, there isn't a sense of urgency (紧迫感). And you may put off reading the book and never finish it.

Take reading notes (笔记)

You can get a little if you only read books. A good reader often take notes. You can write your feelings about a story. You can also write what you have learnt from a certain paragraph (段落), for example, the writing skills.

Suggestions on How to Be a Good 81
